

Edinburgh: A Historical and Topographical Account of the City (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Edinburgh: A Historical and Topographical Account of the City The aim of the author in writing this book has been, as far as possible, to connect the history of Edinburgh with the description of the chief objects of interest, and thus to make the history a living reality to the reader. Accordingly the first three chapters have been devoted to an outline of the history of the city, while in the later chapters parts of the history have been given in greater detail, and have been linked with the objects round which that history centres. In addition to the historical and descriptive part of the book, chapters dealing with Literary Men and Social Life and Customs have been added, which, it is hoped, may in some measure enable the twentieth-century visitor to realise the strange admixture of charm and squalor in the Edinburgh of long ago. An Itinerary has been added to enable strangers to use the time at their disposal to the best advantage. An index will also be found at the end of the book.
