Wid. Poor Clarinda. CUr. Clar. I then came up. to town My boy, heaven was pleasd to take--I found out Sir Amorous; but he, to and to my afflictions, when I expected pity and redress, despisd and scornd me; and while I was drinking tea with Miranda this afternoon, her brother, Mr. Ccirt-tvell, proposd him to her for a husband You may be sure this alarmd me; for stioud he marry, then all my hopes os help from him were lost, and I should be abandond to the utmost flume and poverty. Wid. I am not so much surprizd at the ingratitude f mankind, who generally return with neglect the highest obligations of our sex,. as that after so many examples of their persidy, we shoud ever conside in their false oaths and promises, and purchase contempt at the expence of our virtue and fame-But, dear cousin, I cannot express my concern for your misfortunes; I woud advise you quickly to make Miranda acquainted with your story. Shes good naturd, and will contrive some means for your redress. Clar. I have already--I waited till her brother went away, and told her all--Her tender heart was movd; file promisd me her aid, bid me have hope, for that (lie woud engage I shoud marry him before I went to bed; but how thats possible I cant conceive. However, stie affurd me, it shoud be so; and has orderd me to be with her by eight oclock. Wid. This is surprising! tis now after six--I suppose shell not go out to night, so cousin, Ill go to her apartment, pay her a visit by myself, and encourage her to proceed in your cause, Exeunt.
