Excerpt from Protection Against Fire, the Best Means of Putting Out Fires in Cities, Towns, and Villages: Practical Suggestions for the Security of Life and Property

Near the close of a hot summer day, many years since, the people of Charlestown, Massachusetts, were startled by the cry of fire. On a small house near the bridge, there was a little fire, perhaps three feet in diameter. An earnest man could have dashed it out in a minute or two, with a pail of water. No one, however, made an attempt to do what every one supposed would be done in a few minutes but the firemen. The firemen did not come as expected, and as there was a high wind, the fire quadrupled its proportions every minute, and soon the flames leaped upon two large buildings, which before the first engine got to work were well all on fire. The people now saw their error, but it was too late. The engine was powerless, and soon other great buildings were in flames, and a conflagration was imminent.
