

In the Steps of the Master

The story I tell is a simple one, the author says in the Introduction. It describes the adventure of a man who went to the holy Land to see the places associated with the life of Christ and to find out for himself what new light the historian and the archaeologist have cast upon the world of the Gospels. Visiting all the ancient landmarks and localities connected with the birth of Christianity, he addresses their significance and recalls the events of which they are memorials. Describing enchantment of the people and the land, he transports the reader back to the days of Christ. The whole idea is an unusual one, but the uniqueness of the book lies in its writing. H.V. Morton's inimitable style and fertile imagination have established in America a large and devoted following. He brings here, to an age-old subject, a freshness and life that are wholly delightful-an appeal that is universal.
