

The Orient and Its People (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Orient and Its People
In the Orient are the two vast empires of India and China. In their antiquity, extent, fertility, and greatness of population, they rank first among the nations of the earth. In these two countries are nearly of people, about one-half of the earth's inhabitants, all bound by the shackles of idolatry, superstition, and ignorance. For the breaking of these fetters, and enlightenment of these millions of our fellow men, we are called upon to sustain Christian missions, in which many Christians have but little interest, because they fail to realize that the heathen are men and women like ourselves, of the same mental and moral capabilities; that for like reasons we all eat and drink, buy and sell, attire and adorn ourselves; that the same motives prompt the heathen and Christian father to toil for his family; that it is one love, mother love, that calls forth the fond caressings and gentle lullabies of Christian and heathen mothers for their tender babes; that human laughter and human tears have but one language the wide world.
