

The Cradle of Mankind: Life in Eastern Kurdistan (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Cradle of Mankind: Life in Eastern Kurdistan
The truth is, that ye ken naething about our hill country, or Hielands as we ca them. Theyre a kind of wild world by themselves, full of heights and howes, caverns, lochs, rivers and mountains, that it would tire the very deevils wings to flee to the tap of them. And the folk are clean anither set frae the likes of buz; theres nae bailie-courts among them - nae magistrates that dinna bear the sword in vain. Never another law hae they but the length of their dirks; the broad-swords pursuer, and the target is defender, and the stoutest head bears langest out. About the Publisher
