

Doris Day: Her Own Story

If you only know Doris Day from her movies, then you don't know Doris Day! This book was a revelation for me. It is based on interviews Miss Day had with Mr. Hotchner. Interspersed throughout are excerpts from interviews with those who worked with her or knew her well, such as James Garner. It appears that Doris Day has had a very troubled life. She was born Doris Mary Ann Kappelhoff in 1922 in Cincinnati to a homemaker mother and a pianist/piano teacher father. They divorced when she was young. She was very talented in dance and loved performing. She was going to L.A. to further her dance education as a teenager, but on the eve of her trip she was injured in a terrible car crash. Her leg was broken in several places. At first, they didn't know if she'd walk again. Her recovery took about a year which she spent at home. She listened to the radio in her bedroom and started singing along to it. Thus her next passion as a singer was born. By age 16, she was performing on the radio and singing with big bands. Her sunny disposition belied the fact that she was in an abusive first marriage. What surprised me was that she never wanted to be a movie star; she only wanted to be a wife and mother. It seemed that she was open to the possibilities of a career and that the public responded well to her. I loved how forthright she was about her relationships and her opinions.
