

Organized Crime of Asian Origin: Record of Hearing III October 23-25, 1984 New York, New York

Since the early 1960s, when Joseph Valachi provided dramatic testimony concerning the activities of La Cosa Nostra, many people (including representatives of leading law enforcement agencies) have gained the impression that organized crime in the United States is dominated by, or consists almost totally of, the LCN families whose members are of Italian origin. Other criminal groups of different background have frequently been described merely as emerging groups. In its efforts to develop detailed information on these emerging groups, the Presidents Commission on Organized Crime decided that its third hearing, in October, 1984, should concentrate on criminal groups in this country whose members have ethnic origins in three countries in Asia: China, Japan, and Vietnam. Because far less is publicly known about the size, composition, and activities of these Asian groups, the Commission solicited testimony from numerous law enforcement officials in local and Federal agencies, and even from police officers in foreign jurisdictions such as Toronto and Amsterdam. The Commission also obtained testimony from various cooperating witnesses with first-hand knowledge of the activities of these groups. Finally, the Commission made use of the powers conferred on it by its enabling legislation to issue subpoenas to, and to compel the testimony of, other witnesses. Through these witnesses, the Commission sought to develop some of the information that law enforcement agencies previously have lacked about these groups, and to assess their significance in comparison with other criminal organizations.
