Excerpt from Catalogue of the Manks Crosses With the Runic Inscriptions: And Various Readings and Renderings Compared Since this little Catalogue was first published, more of our ancient Crosses have been brought to light, short descriptions of which are here included. The Author gladly avails himself also of the opportunity to correct several errors which, unfortunately, crept into the First Edition, in consequence of its having been put through the press very hurriedly. Besides this the Ogham Inscriptions are now added. An alteration is made in the arrangement, some, which in the First Edition were added separately as being of rather different character and of earlier date, being here included and numbered with the rest. The descriptions have been all carefully revised, and some of them entirely re-written. By the kind courtesy of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, three most interesting Crosses figured in their Proceedings, from photographs by Mr G. Patterson, are here reproduced. The larger work referred to in the Introduction is still in hand - the expense of illustrations, such as the Author wishes to have, being more than at present he can undertake.
