 The Hierarchy of the Koraysh
 To gain a better understanding of the leaders and their position within the tribe of Koraysh during these early years of Islam, one should know the roles of these prominent people, because each one was destined to play an important role in one way or another in the years that followed:
 The custodianship of the Kabah and keeper of its keys was Othman, Talhas son, whilst the family entrusted to look after the welfare of the pilgrims was Nuwfal, under the direction of Harith, Aamirs son, whereas it was the responsibility of Al-Abbas to provide them with water.
 The advisor to the Koraysh was Yazid, Rabia Al-Aswads son from the tribe of Asad. However, when the need came for an arbitrator, Abu Bakr was called upon.
 The chief of the tribe of Umayyah was Abu Sufyan, who was also its standard bearer. During times of hostilities, Waleed, Mughirahs son from the tribe of Makhzum was responsible for organizing camp affairs. He also commanded the cavalry, however when Harb, Umayyahs son died, Abu Sufyan was thought not be sufficiently proficient to assume the command, so the position was given to Waleed.
 Amr, Hishams son, was an influential, power-seeking young man of the Makhzum tribe. He was the grandson of Mughirah and nephew of Waleed, the now elderly chieftain of his tribe.
 Omar from the Koraysh tribe of Adi was the liaison officer. He would also decided upon important issues such as lineage. Superstition was rampant, and the chief interpreter of omens was Safwan, another son of Umayyah. The office of treasurer was administered by Harith, Kais son from the tribe of Sahn. The chieftain of the tribe of Hashim was Abu Talib, later to be succeeded by the infamous Abu Lahab. It is important to remember that the tribes of Hashim and Umayyah were equally prominent. For many years they had been jealous of one another and acute rivalry existed between them. The Command to Preach Three years after the Prophet (salla Allahu alihi wa sallam) received the first Revelation, Allah commanded him to extend his preaching publicly saying: Proclaim then, what you are commanded and turn away from the unbelievers. We suffice you against those who mock, and those who set up other gods with Allah, indeed, they will soon know. Indeed, We know your chest is straitened by that they say. Koran Chapter 15 verse 94-97 The number of converts had risen steadily, many of whom were relatives of the Prophet (salla Allahu alihi wa sallam). However, there were some who chose to conceal their belief for the time being. For example Al-Abbas, who on several future occasions played a vital role in the protection of Muslims. Al-Abbas only publicly announced his conversion shortly before the opening of Mecca. Also, we recall that Al-Abbas wife Umm Fadl was the second lady to embrace Islam and he raised no objection to her conversion.
