

Bound East and West: Traveling to Berlin and Back

In 1987, two years before the Wall came down in Berlin, proto-slacker Jeffrey Schuster, lured to the divided city by the rumor of cheap rents, left San Francisco and traveled across the country on a Greyhound bus, stopping for a month in Iowa City, crashing on couches, hanging out with friends, before continuing on to New York, London, Paris, and finally West Berlin, where he lived mostly on coffee, potato soup, and heavy German bread. Later, down to his last few dollars, he borrowed a little money to get back to the United States, where he then found employment in a convenience store along a highway in New Jersey.
