

Oregon Tourism Heroes: Steve Pre Prefontaine and Ken Kesey's Journey for Freedom

Oregon Tourism Heroes, by Dave Masko. Award-winning new journalism reporter Dave Masko is generally better known for his e-books that explore digital technology addiction than for his distinguished travel writing. Here he combines his great reporting skills as a reporter characterization and narrative pace with the keen observational insight of the outsider, and descriptive power of a seasoned travel writer. To this he adds his inquiring mind as a commentator on Oregon's back door tourism, the states freedom fighting heroes and why visitors wanting more insight into what's really happening in The Beaver State that is never really featured online. Masko's wryly amusing new journalism reports take readers into the heart of Oregon's push for diversity, freedom from being leashed to information technology devices/gadgets and why the late Steve Pre Prefontaine and Ken Kesey are much more to Oregonians than just like heroes. His understated prose is interspersed with outstanding descriptions and never shared stories about Pre, Kesey and other Oregon legends that never gave an inch when it comes to personal freedom; while pushing back against the odious Big Brother technology machine and the greedy evil that men do. Under the states Beach Bill, enacted back in Pre and Kesey's time in 1967, all people were granted free and uninterrupted use of the beaches along Oregon's 362 mile-long coastline. To celebrate this state beach freedom, Kesey purchased a summer home at the famous UFO sighting location at Brays Point; while Prefontaine ran up and down the coast with a joy that surpasses all understanding. The author shares one special moment in time when Kesey who qualified for the U.S. Olympic wrestling team, but a bad shoulder injury ended his wrestling career attended an alma mater event at the University of Oregon in Eugene when Prefontaine's massive leg speed nearly broke the world record for the mile at 3:54.6. Fans recall Kesey sporting a special Pre T-shirt that read LEGEND, while this Oregon literary hero changed Pre! Pre! Pre! as fellow University of Oregon hero took a victory lap and then returned the honor yelling to Kesey, Ken! Ken! Ken! The two alumni then hugged against the backdrop of this mecca for track and field, Hayward Field that hosts the 2016 Olympic Team Trails in July 2016. While both of these famed Oregonian heroes would pass on with Pre dying on May 30, 1975 and Kesey going Further on Nov. 10, 2001, these great men continue as countercultural figures because they had the right stuff. Prefontaine said, To give anything less than your best is to sacrifice the gift; while Kesey wrote, You cant really be strong until you see a funny side of things. This book is then a gift to those who visit this great state of Oregon where you see a funny side of things not found anywhere else on Earth.
