Learning in the Face of Adversity: The UNRWA Education Program for Palestine Refugees (World Bank Studies)

There is much to learn from the United Nations Relief and Works (UNRWA) schoolsfor Palestine refugees. This experience highlights the fact that in the context of adversity and confl ict the education system requires more than the education model. mainstream From themainstream lens, the UNRWA system exhibits the effective classroom practices teachers, strong school leadership, assessments, and shared accountability for which supportorganizational learning, adaptability and performance in the face of adversity. Equally important are recognition of the risks and vulnerabilities that students and a commitment to foster relevantinteractions across school and community actors to support learning and protection of studentsin such challenging contexts. A resilience approach does not imply that schools and communitiesat risk are left to fend alone, but calls for an alignment and institutionalization education at asystems level to support the resilience processes of which students, teachers, and families availthemselves. As such, the UNRWA experience merits further exploration and investigation intosystems-level efforts that sustain, amid a diffi cult context, quality learning opportunities for allchildren and youth.
