Not illustrated. 1818 Excerpt: ... at present must enter. Alluding to the year 1811, when this tavern was in great vogue. BARDS--DERIVATION OF THE WORD, AND WHY POETS ARE SO CALLED. This word is derived from bards, the most ancient order (and very reasonably believed a religious order) of persons among the old Britons. They were before the druids, though afterwards eclipsed by them in point of authority and reputation. They are taken notice of by several ancient authors, as Strabo, Hesychius, &c. They were wont to sing the praises, in words set to music, of eminent and renowned persons; whence they are called by those authors, poets, songsters, composers of verses, and the like. They were employed in the apotheosis, or deification of distinguished heroes. They received their mode of singing from the Phoenicians, who were the first, that, by the necessity of their affairs, and their extraordinary skill in navigation, under their great leader Hercules, not the Grecian Hercules, but son to the king of Tyre, traded with the inhabitants of Great Britain, but more especially with the more southern part of it, where there are still several remarkable relics of Phoenician antiquity.. WAPENTAKE--DERIVATION OF. Wapentake is a certain division of a county, otherwise called a hundred. The name is derived from an ancient custom, wherein a person, who came to take upon him the government of a hundred, was met by the better sort of people, who touched his weapon or lance with their spears; by which ceremony, they were united together, and entered into a mutual association. REGISTERS IN PARISH CHURCHES. The register of a parish church is a book, in which baptisms, marriages, and burials are in each parish, every year, orderly registered. This custom was laudably instituted by that great, but unfortuna...
