

I Miss My Newfound Friend - The World: Around The World With Many Maps!

My husband and I lived a relatively quiet and secure life, waking up everyday and knowing the general plan for the day or the week ahead. In the past we had occasionally taken a trip longer than a week. Then one day that all changed and we sold our house, said goodbye to all our friends, paid up our bills, opened a post office box, canceled our electricity, water and every other service we had connected with our house, rented a storage unit for a year, gave mammoth amounts of furniture and kitsch to homeless shelters, stored the remainder of boxes and furniture in the unit, bought an expensive back pack and left our home in Phoenix, Arizona, first on our motorcycles riding around the United States for several weeks, and finally boarding an airplane for Australia and eventually other parts of the world. Everything was new - boredom became a thing of the past, culture shock occurred, our lives together, as husband and wife and best of friends, were challenged like never before and we were privileged by participating in the world school of culture everyday. How much more exciting can life get?
