

Dictionary of National Biography, Vol. 21 (Classic Reprint)

Garnett Garnett GARNETT, HENRY(1555-1606),jesuit born in 1555 at Heanor, Derbyshire (not a Nottingham, as is commonly stated), was the son of Brian Garnett and his wife, Alice Jay. Father John Gerard states that his parents were well esteemed, and well able to maintain their family. He adds that his father was a man of learning who taught in the free school of Nottingham (Narrative of the Gunpowder Plot, ed. Morris, 1872, p. 297 Tablet, 25 May 1889, p. 817). Garnett was brought up as a protestant, and in 1567 was admitted a scholar of Winchester. He did not proceed in due course to New College, Oxford. According to his catholic biographers: he resolved to leave the school on embracing the catholic faith, although some of his teachers at Winchester who were inclined to Catholicism tried to induce him to remain.
Dr. Robert Abbot (1560-1617) q. v. asserts, on the contrary, that the warden admonished him not to remove to New College on account of his gross immoralities at school (Antilogia Epist. ad Lectorem). Jardine admits that the account of Garnett's early depravity has certainly more of the character of a tale of malignant scandal than of a calm narration of facts.
He quotes, however, some passages including one from a statement attributed to Garnett in the Tower, to countenance a charge of drunkenness (Narrative of the Gunpowder Plot, pp. 172,179 n.) Garnett removed from Winchester to London, where he began to study law, and became corrector of the press to Tottel, the celebrated law printer. While he was in this employment he formed an acquaintance with Chief-justice Popham, who recognised him on his first examination, and treated him throughout the inquiry with great respect. Coke, in his speech at Garnett's trial, represents him as a man having many excellent gifts and endowments of nature; by birth a gentleman, by education a scholar, by art learned(Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and dont occur in the book.)
