

The History of Man, Vol. 2 of 2: Or, the Wonders of Human Nature, in Relation to the Virtues, Vices, and Defects of Both Sexes (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The History of Man, Vol. 2 of 2: Or, the Wonders of Human Nature, in Relation to the Virtues, Vices, and Defects of Both Sexes They will approve of nothing but what they first invent themselves, no interpretation is good, but what their infallible spirits dictate. They are the only wife, the only learned in all truths, and all are damned but they and their followers. They make a laughter of the scriptures, and turn it like a nose of wax to their own purposes: Though fathers, councils, and all the world oppose their sentiments, they will persevere hi their heresies. Besides these common, they have also peculiar symptoms, which are prodigious paradoxes, new doctrines, and vain phantasms, as many and different as they are among themselves. Now what these brainsick heretics once broach, and importers set on foot; be it never so absurd, false, and prodigious, too many of the common rout will follow and believe, and either out of affectation of novelty, simplicity, blind zeal, hope or fear, the giddy headed multitude will embrace it, and without further examination approve it. Many of the leaders are men of understanding in other matters, but in this are certainly lunatics, and have more need of hellebore, than those that are confined in Bedlam.
