Not illustrated. 1881 Excerpt: ...the story of a Saviours love--the pathway to their heavenly home; how had they returned all these mercies? Alas! too often had they accepted the gift with entire forgetfulness of the Giver. They had prized far too little the offer of pardon which it-had cost their Saviour his life to obtain, far too little the love of the Father who had given his only Son to save the world. For all these and manifold other transgressions the suppliant sought forgiveness at the throne of grace, and then implored blessings for time to come. Especially was Gods favor sought for the dear friend who had come in to unite with them in this delightful service--that he with his whole family might belong to the household of faith, and be heirs of the heavenly inheritance. By this time Gilbert, who had been trying to suppress his feelings, sobbed aloud; and as soon as the family arose from prayer, went hastily from the room. Mrs. Appleton put out her hand to detain Martha in the parlor, that he might have time to recover himself. After a few moments Henry followed him, and urged him to return. I dont feel well, said Gilbert, trying to apologize for his unusual emotions. Im clear run down, and cant bear anything more than a baby. And with this explanation the tears began to flow again. His friend was much moved, and his heart wept up in a silent prayer to God that he might be able to speak the word in season to this penitent soul. He led him back to the parlor, and found that his wife had gone with the little ones to their rest, to afford them an opportunity for free conversation. In the course of this, Gilbert readily confessed that he was heartily sick of living as he did, and if he could enjoy religion as his friend seemed to, he should
