

Someone Had To Be Hated: Julian LaRose Harris - A Biography

The social progress and post-war economic prosperity that characterized the South during the Roaring Twenties had a dark underside typified by racial hatred, legal chicanery, political cronyism, illiteracy, and religious extremism. To serve Georgia and the South to the fullest, to make a real difference, someone had to be willing to be hated, willing to shout the distasteful truth from the rooftops to create a fierce discontent with public conditions and a determined intent to change them. Such a man was Julian LaRose Harris. The son of noted journalist and folklorist Joel Chandler Harris, Julian Harris (1874-1963) struggled all his life to carve his own niche in the world and emerge from the shadow of his famous father. As editor of the Columbus Enquirer-Sun, Harris found both his voice and soapbox. There, with his equally talented wife, journalist Julia Collier Harris, he spent the 1920s fighting the Ku Klux Klan, lynching, anti-evolution laws, Prohibition, corruption in state government, and substandard public education. It took uncommon courage to push a progressive agenda in a provincial cottonmill town like Columbus during the twenties and Harris, more than any other man, deserves credit for freeing Georgia from the grip of the Klan. For his efforts, he and his newspaper won the 1926 Pulitzer Prize for public service; he was the first Georgian to be so honored. This sharply-etched biography reveals Harris in his many complexities: courageous, yet insecure; debonair, yet sarcastic; gracious, yet combative; sentimental, yet cynical; kind, yet belligerent; and, a loving, family man who was also a social and political maverick. This is the nearly forgotten story of a journalistic hero in the early twentieth century who unquestionably made his beloved South a better place.
