

Louden Nelson From Slavery To Philanthropy

Louden Nelson was an ex-slave from North Carolina and came out to California with his master where he was given his freedom. The only school in Santa Cruz was closing with no money to keep it open and he gave his land and home to keep the school open. He is buried in Santa Cruz, California. Students visit his gravesite each year to keep it clean. The mayor of Santa Cruz proclaimed May 5th Loudon Nelson day. There is also a center named after Loudon Nelson located in Santa Cruz, California. The local congressman put the book in the archives in the historical records. The university of North Carolina Chapel Hill Liked the book so much they put it in their library to add to their African American Studies. I am in the process of coming out with a movie on the life of Loudon Nelson in the fall of 2014. May this story inspire us to give every child the best education possible.
