

Gleanings in Bee Culture (Classic Reprint)

Thirteen years ago, I commenced using frames the same length as the simplicity frame, and two inches deeper. Since then, I have tried the Thomas, Gallup, Conklin, Hazen, Simplicity, and other sized frames, and rejected all but theS implicity; and were 1to commence again now, it would be with theS implicity frame, with the top bar made different from friend Boot s, ten frames in a hive. 2d. Is the chaff hive better than theS implicity when both are shaded? My experience during the past summer, in my own apiary, of 38 chaff hives, and over 40 not packed, Is very much in favor of the chaff packing. Colonies in the chaff hives have swarmed the least and stored the most sectionj[honey. 3d. Would you advise one to make chaff hives in preference to any other? Yes; especially, if bees are to bo wintered on their summer stands. 4th. Is sawdust better than chaff? No; use no sawdust in packing. It not only packs too close, but it absorbs and retains moisture. 5th. Is the upper story surrounded with chaff? Yes. 6th. Ought either to be stamped tight, or thrown in loose? Press the chaff down tight withjthe hand, close enough so that it will not settle and leave an open space at the top. 7th. What does it cost you in money to get up a chaff hive? I can not give an exact answer, but it is not far from $1.25. This is for the lumber, dressed, ready to cut into suitable lengths, shingles, nails, and paint, but does not include frames and chaff cushions. 8th. How do you keep ants out of the chaff? I have never been troubled with them. A friend tells me that salt sprinkled occasionally on the ground around the hives will effectually rid an apiary of these scavengers. 9th. I have been quite successful wintering bees in my cellar; would you advise mc to abandon it for chaff packing? No; you can make a few chaff hives and if, after giving them a trial for summer and winter use, you (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and dont occur in the book.)
