

Shooting Water: A Mother-daughter Journey

Spanning three continents and four countries, Shooting Water is the remarkable story of the making of Water, the Academy Award-Nominated Film by Deepa Mehta. In February 2000, Devyani Saltzman traveled to the holy city of Benares, India, to reunite with her estranged mother, international award-winning filmmaker Deepa Mehta, and to work on her latest film, Water. But after only a week of shooting, the film became the target of a series of politically-motivated attacks. Protestors destroyed the sets, burned effigies of the director, and made threats on her life. Water was shut down. What began as a journey to heal deep wounds from the past turned into a five-year odyssey to complete a film. This edition includes a new Epilogue by the author, chronicling Water's triumph after its tumultuous birth: first, opening the Toronto International Film Festival; then, receiving an Academy Award nomination for Best Foreign Language Film, and, finally, coming full circle with the film's national release in India. Reviews: More than a document exposing the emergence of deeper feelings between the two women, Shooting Water is a detailed chronicle of the making of one of the most controversial films in Canadian history. In fact, Saltzman marvelously dissects the cultural and political complexities of India. The Globe and Mail: A lush, evocative memoir. Publishers Weekly (starred review) A must read. Beautiful and haunting. - Montreal Gazette: A winner. Shooting Water is a powerful document that examines the nature of rupture, and the capacity of human beings to reach out and rework relationships through love. - The Sunday Tribune (India): A poignant memoir. - The New York Times: Saltzman proves herself a deft writer in this deeply evocative memoir. - Cleveland Plain Dealer: A languid and sensuous exploration of the subcontinent through the eyes of an estranged daughter. - Kirkus Reviews A gripping memoir. Its impossible not to be drawn into the surprisingly revealing journey. - Inside Entertainment
