

Marriage Rites, Customs, and Ceremonies, of All Nations of the Universe (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Marriage Rites, Customs, and Ceremonies, of All Nations of the Universe Women form so prominent a feature in the history of the universe, that whatever respects their various ranks and conditions must be important and entertaining. They have been endowed with the possession of the milder virtues, and claim the protection of the stronger sex, whose legislators, in proportion as they have adopted a more liberal and enlightened policy, have raised them to their just rank in society. Philosophically considered, there is but little inequality in the conditions of the two sexes. They are born, sustained, and die in the same manner. Education makes a distinction, which is connected with the domestic duties to which the physical state of women is peculiarly liable.
