

Memoirs of Robert-Houdin: Ambassador, Author, and Conjurer

From the Universal Review, July December, 1859: The Memoirs of Robert-Houdin are full of interest, and have wrought in us a pleasant sort of surprise. This famous conjurer was an honest man and no charlatan. There seems to have been no knavery in him, only a wonderful aptitude for doing sleight-of-hand tricks and all sorts of feats, the excellence of which lies in deception. His career has been creditable to himself and thoroughly successful. He is rather vain of his skill and reputation. Most men of his profession and country would be intolerably vain he is only pleasantly self-satisfied. He may now add authorship to the list of his other accomplishments, for his book is a respectable performance. The account of his early life and the story of Torrini the conjurer are capital. As to his own cleverness as a conjuror, it would be impossible for any one to convey an idea of it to those who have not seen him. We can only hope that for the delectation of our children, some among him may inherit the faculty diabolic, and be impelled to exercise it coram populo. May full houses and high prices await the Robert Houdin of the next generation! and a peaceful happy old age the great conjurer of our day, who has made his fortune out of the abundant gaping wonderment of us all!
