A SONNET. The Past. how much that word contains! how sweet The recollections stirred by it! how fast They nutter through my mind, and sometimes cast A tinge of sadness oer me as I greet A eain friends long gone, but whom I meet Oft as I look upon the pleasant Past. OP ast lthy pleasures shall in memory last, Till my fond heart has found its resting seat. OP resent! that in trulh art always nigh ;W heed not, and still more, we love not thee, But for the Future frequently we sigb, Believing that it cannot fail to be More pleasant; and our aspirations high Must be fulfilled, OF uture, there in thee! E. B. A. In beginning the college year it is but fitting that we should look forward with interest to the future of the various college enterprises, and to none do we look forward with more interest and anxiety than to that of the Dorian Cricket Club. The first eleven met with sad reverses last spring, which seemed even
