Excerpt: ... STAGE COACH DAYS AND STAGE COACH WAYS. Read at a meeting of the Society, February 18, 1895. BY FREDERICK A. CURRIER. Stage coaches and public conveyance is a subject which, at the first view, appears to touch only the surface of society, but it really involves many features of a nations social life; and among the customs and manners of by-gone days, there is nothing which offers more interesting association, adventure, good fellowship and fun, than the study of the old-time coaching. A glance at the history of public traveling vehicles shows that our forefathers, in order to travel on land in the early days, had to go on horseback or foot it. Stage-coaching in America originated, of course, from the English system, although differing from it in many respects. In the very old days, when the horse was considered the only fit means of locomotion for the lords of creation, men looked with contempt on the first rude wheeled conveyances, thinking them only fit for women and invalids, though the latter would have had a hard time in the primitive coach. In England, the first coaches appeared about the time of Queen Elizabeth. A satirical poet of those times wrote thus: When Queen Elizabeth came to the crowne, A coach in England then was scarcely knowne; Then twas as rare to see one as to spye A tradesman that had never told a lie. About 1670 appeared the following announcement in London: FLYING MACHINE. All who desire to pass from London to Bath, or any other place on the road, let them repair to the Bell Savage, on Ludgate Hill in London, and the White Lion at Bath, at both of which places they may be received in a stage coach every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, which performs the whole journey in three days (if God permits), and sets forth at five in t...
