

Iracema: The Honey-Lips, a Legend of Brazil (Classic Reprint)

Portuguese. He entered into bonds of friendship with Jacaiina and his brother Poty, who were chiefs of the Indians of the seaboard. In 1608, by order of Dom Diogo Menezes, he returned to establish a colony, and in 1611 he founded the fortified place of Nossa Senhora do Amparo, or Our Lady of Protection. Jacaiina, who lived on the borders of the Aracaju River of the Heron nest settled near it with his tribe, to protect it from the Indians of the interior, and from the French, who then infested the coast. Poty eventually became a Christian, and was baptized Antonio Felipe Camarao. He highly distinguished himself when the Dutch invaded the coast, and his services were richly rewarded by the Portuguese Government. Martim Soares Moreno became a Field-Marshal, and was one of those brave Portuguese leaders who delivered Brazil from the Hollander invasion. Ceara should honour his memory as that of a good and valiant man, and the first settlement by Coelho at the mouth of the Jaguaribe having proved a failure hold him to be her true founder. My readers will better understand this tale by my explaining that the Pytigudras were an aboriginal tribe who occupied the shores between Parnahyba and the Jaguaribe, or Rio Grande. Their chiefs were Jacaiina and Poty (afterwards Camarao, the Prawn), two brothers, who were firm allies to the Portuguese.
