Not illustrated. 1888 Excerpt: ...has a couple of breweries, churches of different denominations, and other indications of civilisation. At the junction of the King and the Ovens, it is remarkable to see how long the clear bright current of the former refuses to mingle with the muddy waters of the latter, until at last the purer stream becomes contaminated by the evil association, and the waters of the two can no longer be distinguished. The moralist might well apply to his own purpose a phenomenon which the secular writer merely notes. The same thing occurs at the meeting of the Rhone and the Arve a little below Geneva. From Bundalong the Murray slowly pursues its winding course through the flat, plain country until Yarrawonga and Mulwala are reached. The river here is a rather narrow stream, flowing between low banks fringed by a few gum-trees. It is still crossed by an ancient punt, though for many years past a bridge has been promised, and the inhabitants complain bitterly that the good intentions of the Government are nothing more than good intentions. Yarrawonga is a town that has grown rapidly of late years, and is still increasing, both in population and in general prosperity. In its case the precedent of Corowa and Wahgunyah has been reversed, since here it is the Victorian township that is ahead of Mulwala, its New South Wales rival. The land on both sides of the river, a mile or two back, is said to be very good for both pastoral and agricultural purposes, and large quantities of grain are grown throughout the district, as much as nine bags to the acre being occasionally obtained; but it is to be regretted that the farmers, by neglecting to manure, and by growing cereals year by year without regard to rotation of crops, are rapidly exhausting the soil. The country for some distan...
